Harish slams Centre over NBDS meeting agenda

Hyderabad, Oct 17: Former Minister and BRS Legislature Party Deputy Floor Leader T. Harish Rao on Saturday strongly objected to including the Godavari–Cauvery river-linking project in the upcoming National Board for Dam Safety (NBDS) meeting agenda, warning that the proposal threatens Telangana's water rights.

Speaking to reporters at Telangana Bhavan, Harish Rao alleged that the Union government acted swiftly on an October 7 letter from Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N. Chandrababu Naidu to include the item on the November 3 meeting agenda, while neglecting Telangana's interests.Harish Rao accused Naidu of attempting to divert Godavari waters to Andhra Pradesh and alleged that Telangana Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy's silence on the matter was a political concession ("gurudakshina") to his AP counterpart.

He maintained that Telangana's water interests could be safeguarded only if the river-linking project is executed via the Sammakka Sagar project. Routing the link through Bollepalli—which he claimed would fall under Andhra Pradesh's control—is part of a larger conspiracy against Telangana, Harish Rao asserted. He noted that while the previous BRS regime secured half the necessary clearances for Sammakka Sagar, the current Congress administration's negligence caused the Detailed Project Report (DPR) to be returned.

Raising concerns over local irrigation, Harish Rao accused the state government of releasing Devadula project waters downstream, warning this could force local farmers into a crop holiday. Demanding an apology from Chief Minister Revanth Reddy, Harish Rao questioned whether the Centre was prioritizing Andhra Pradesh's demands because of the Telugu Desam Party's (TDP) 16 NDA MPs.

He also targeted Telangana's 17 MPs, including Union Ministers G. Kishan Reddy and Bandi Sanjay Kumar, for failing to raise the issue in New Delhi. Warning that the BRS would launch an agitation if Telangana is denied its rightful share of Godavari waters, Harish Rao said the party will announce its action plan soon.

Clarifying the party's stance, Madhuyashki Goud stressed that Congress's opposition to the SIR is driven by national interest rather than electoral calculations. In view of climate-related challenges, including El Niño, he urged employees to discharge their duties with greater responsibility to ensure uninterrupted coal supplies to power plants. The Deputy Chief Minister said Singareni must supply quality coal at competitive prices, improve productivity and curb unnecessary expenditure to remain competitive in the evolving coal market.

Yogi's Video Changed Her Life; Kerala Woman Invites UP CM to Wedding

A Kerala woman Arundhati on Saturday wrote to Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath, inviting him to her wedding in December, while recalling how she got inspired by the latter that "being emotional is not a weakness". In an emotional letter to the Uttar Pradesh CM, whom she considers an elder brother, Arundhati wrote: "With immense happiness and heartfelt respect, I am writing to invite you to one of the most precious occasions of my life -- my wedding with Rahul, which will be held on December 20 at Green Park Convention Centre in Kerala's Aluva."

Recalling how the Chief Minister became her source of motivation, she said: "When I was young, whenever I got hurt or felt deeply about something, I used to cry. Some of my friends would tell me that being emotional was a weakness and that I needed to be strong. Slowly, I began to believe that showing emotions was something I should be ashamed of. I wondered whether I could ever become a strong person if I was someone who could cry easily."

"One day my cousin brother showed me a video of you in which you became emotional and cried while expressing your feelings. He told me something that I have never forgotten: 'Being emotional or crying does not make you weak. Be like Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath Ji. Let your work answer everything'," she mentioned. She said that the words changed the way she looked herself. "For the first time, I understood that strength doesn't mean that we never feel emotions.

I understood that being strong can also mean having the courage to feel them and a reason to stand back up and continue moving forward," she added. Arundhati recalled that since then, whenever she was engulfed in self-doubt, she reminded herself that "strength is not about hiding who we are". "It is about what we choose to do with our lives, our responsibilities and our challenges," she emphasised. Addressing CM Yogi Adityanath, she said: "

That is why, for me, you are more than a leader. In a way, I have always looked upon like an elder brother, someone whose journey has given me courage and inspiration." She also added that the Uttar Pradesh CM's "combination of discipline, determination, courage and the willingness to take responsibility" is what inspired her. Before beginning a completely new chapter of her life, she said that she wanted to invite someone who "unknowingly became a part of her journey towards becoming stronger and believing in herself".

Acknowledging the Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister's busy schedule, Arundhati has also written that if he is unable to attend the ceremony in person, even a message conveying his best wishes and blessings would be invaluable to her. She expressed her gratitude to CM Adityanath for teaching her, through a single lesson, to accept her emotions rather than regard them as a weakness.

SC: Child Safety Cannot Override Right to Internet Access

The Supreme Court on Saturday held that the right to access and use the internet is a fundamental right of every individual, including children irrespective of their age, saying that measures to protect children from online sexual exploitation must target harmful content and those responsible for its circulation rather than restrict children's access to the internet.

In its judgment dealing with the circulation of Child Sexual Exploitation and Abuse Material (CSEAM) on online platforms, a bench of Justices J.B. Pardiwala and K. Vinod Chandran said that the safety of children and their freedom were not at odds with each other, and that children were entitled to both.

The apex court was hearing an application filed by Just Rights for Children Alliance (JRCA) seeking effective implementation of the Supreme Court's September 23, 2024, judgment in Just Rights for Children Alliance vs S. Harish, which dealt with the obligations of social media intermediaries to report suspected offences involving child sexual abuse material.

In its judgment, the Supreme Court held: "We have no hesitation in saying that the right to access and use the internet is a fundamental right of every individual under Article 21 read with Article 19(1)(a) of the Constitution. Our children, irrespective of their age enjoy the same rights." It added that denying children access to the internet altogether would be as absurd as suggesting that children below a certain age did not have a conscience worth protecting or freedom of speech worth expressing.

The Justice Pardiwala-led bench said that although the internet was far from safe for children, any measure intended to ensure their safety must be directed at harmful material and those responsible for it, and not at children themselves. "To keep the child away from the internet on account of such failures would be to mistake the victim for the problem," it said.

Highlighting the importance of digital access in children's lives, the Supreme Court said the internet was a marketplace of ideas, creative expression and information, with its value extending to adults and children alike. "For many children, particularly in remote areas, it is often the only source of learning and information. Likewise for children with special needs, the internet is often the only place where they are able to find company in others like them," the judgment said. Rejecting blanket restrictions on children's internet access as a solution to online abuse, the Justice Pardiwala-led bench said that their effectiveness remained unproven and that such measures could expose children to even greater risks.

It said children did not stop using the internet merely because the law prohibited them from doing so, but continued accessing it without the knowledge of their parents or authorities, often moving to other platforms and websites that were unregulated and even more unsafe.

The top court also cautioned that such restrictions could discourage children facing online enticement or threats from reporting incidents to their parents, guardians or trusted adults for fear of being reprimanded for using the internet. "This would significantly undermine the safety of our children, who are already apprehensive about confiding such incidents, even without such restrictions, and defeat the avowed object of the POCSO Act," it said.

However, the Supreme Court clarified that this did not mean there should be no age-based safeguards, acknowledging the need for measures to protect children online and moderate the content accessible to them.

It suggested a framework placing greater emphasis on parental consent, guidance and oversight, along with a dedicated "child mode" for social media accounts, particularly for preteens. Such safeguards could include making accounts private by default, restricting contact and messages from unknown adults, and moderating advertisements and content accessible to children, it said, leaving the modalities to the Union government. The top court also clarified that nothing in its observations would prevent the government from restricting children's access to specific categories of content or services inherently harmful to them, such as adult-content websites. The Supreme Court said intermediaries must ensure that no CSEAM or other material likely to harm children was offered, hosted, uploaded, promoted or circulated through paywalls or subscriptions. It urged the Centre to frame appropriate guidelines for scrutiny of such content and proportionate measures to regulate the content children could access or subscribe to. The judgment called for children to be taught, from the primary stage, about their bodies, safe and unsafe touch, consent, healthy relationships, respect for others and the safe use of the internet.

Law Must Evolve Through Diverse Voices

New Delhi, Oct 17 : Chief Justice of India (CJI), Justice Surya Kant, on Saturday said that law is not static but evolves through the minds and actions of those who practise it, describing it as a "living conversation" shaped by diverse voices and perspectives. Addressing the 34th Annual Convocation of the National Law School of India University (NLSIU), in Bengaluru, the CJI said legal education must go beyond textbooks, statutes and case law to foster intellectual independence, ethical responsibility and the ability to engage with people holding different viewpoints. Ambedkar.

Madhu Yashki Goud, who visited Gandhi Bhavan for the first time after assuming charge as AIPC chairperson, addressed a press conference and stated that the Constitution was as sacred to the people of India as the Bhagavad Gita, the Bible and the Quran. However, he alleged that the Constitution had come under threat after Narendra Modi became Prime Minister in 2014 and accused the BJP government of suppressing citizens' freedoms. He said Rahul Gandhi established the Professionals Congress in 2017 with the aim of bringing experts from various fields onto a common platform to safeguard the Constitution. Before Independence, professionals such as Dadabhai Naoroji, Motilal Nehru, Subhas Chandra Bose, Mahatma Gandhi and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru strengthened the Congress and inspired the people's struggle for freedom.He emphasised that the Professionals Congress had a crucial role to play in protecting the Constitution. People associated with other political parties, as well as those who were not Congress members, could also join hands with the organisation to safeguard the Constitution.

Alleging that the Modi government had deleted 13 crore votes through the Special Intensive Revision (SIR) process, he claimed that a large number of the affected voters belonged to Dalit, Adivasi and minority communities. He said the Congress would present evidence regarding the number of votes allegedly deleted.Madhu Yashki Goud clarified that the Congress's fight against SIR was not intended to secure the political future of the party or ensure the survival of opposition parties. Instead, he said, the struggle was aimed at protecting the future of the country and its coming generations by safeguarding the Constitution and democracy.

He said he would discharge the responsibilities entrusted to him as AIPC chairperson effectively despite the challenging circumstances. urban districts, bringing together teachers, lawyers, doctors, engineers and experts from other fields. He also stressed the need for a 'Shadow Ministry' system, similar to the arrangement in the United States, to independently monitor the functioning of governments and political parties and issue timely reports on developments.Referring to the 22-A prohibited properties list in Telangana, he alleged that certain officials had misled the Revenue Minister and the state government on issues concerning land included in the list. He said a system similar to a Shadow Ministry could help identify and rectify administrative errors promptly and facilitate the formulation of new policies for public benefit.He also recalled his intervention in connection with GO No. 118, stating that he had identified several shortcomings in the previous government's approach and submitted suggestions to the Revenue Minister and officials.
